Dear Sam:

Here are four scripts for the new magazine---a short novel (or long novelette) by H. Beam Piper, a novelette, and two short stories by William Morrison and Richard Wilson. I decided against sending along the Gallun right at the moment; it's an odd length, and I'll have something more suitable pretty soon. (Ray just got back from half a year in Spain, loafing, and he promises a lot of new stories in a hurry.)

Drop in some time, Sam. And let me know if you want to see more in the way of scripts. I don't have much on hand right at the moment, because of the enormous number of new markets these past few months, but I do have almost thirty science-fiction writers turning the stuff out---Asimov, Simak, Leiber, John Wyndham, Wilmar Shiras, Hal Clement, Kornbluth, Piper and Gallun, to name only a few of the better-known ones---and I'll keep the stuff coming as fast as you can handle it.

Seems to me the last time we had dealings I was the editor and you were the agent. Just shows how times change. . . .

Best,

Fran
